The East Twelfth Street House was built previous to 1865 on the easterly end of T. F. May's sub-division. T. F. May was an influential early settler of Cleveland and a member of the first Board of Health. His sub-division extended from Erie Street (E. 9th) to Muirson Street (E. 12th) along the northerly side of what in 1865 became the extension of Superior Street. The westerly end of the sub-division was sold by T. F. May to the Catholic Diocese and St. John's Cathedral still occupies this site.

The house while still having evidence of good design and sturdy construction has been used in recent years as a warehouse and consequently many of the better details have been destroyed.
